ECONOMIC INFORMATION

During both its November and December meetings, the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) cut rates by 25bp, taking interest rates to a target range of 4.25-4.75%, and totaling 100bp in cuts since September. This decision from the FOMC was in response to data they characterized as showing “economic activity has continued to expand at a solid pace.” The data showed labor market conditions easing, an uptick in the unemployment rate, and progress in inflation moving towards their target of 2%. The FOMC continued to feel the economy was moving in the right direction, deciding at their January meeting to hold rates steady as they continued to monitor inflation.
