Treasure Coast adds four monkeypox cases

Florida's total still ranks 3rd highest among states

Jennifer Sangalang and Will Greenlee
Treasure Coast Newspapers
USA TODAY NETWORK - FLORIDA

Florida reported more than 300 new monkeypox cases in one week and was still the third highest state for confirmed or probable cases.

Monkeypox cases on the Treasure Coast totaled nine, up from five this time a week earlier, according to the Florida Department of Health.

There are six cases in Martin County and three in St. Lucie County, while none have been reported in Indian River County, according to DOH data updated Sunday.

Of the nine cases, seven were reported to have been acquired in Florida; one was acquired out of the country, and it wasn't known whether one case was acquired in Florida or elsewhere.

Four of the cases are in the 35-39 age group; two each in the 25-29 and 45-49 age groups; and one is a child 4 years old or younger, data from the DOH shows.

This time last week there were four reported cases in Martin County and one in St. Lucie County.

The Florida Department of Health reported 1,266 confirmed or probable cases of monkeypox in 28 counties, according to its tracker on flhealthcharts.gov. A week ago, the state reported 938 cases — that's a jump of 328 probable or confirmed monkeypox cases here since Aug. 8.

It should be noted that the case numbers in Florida vary from what the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention report. The CDC, for example, shows 1,085 confirmed cases for the Sunshine State, an increase of 452 confirmed cases in a week. According to the CDC, here's a snapshot of U.S. and Florida confirmed cases in the past few weeks:

- As of Aug. 15, the CDC listed 11,177 total confirmed monkeypox/orthopoxvirus cases in the U.S. and 1,085 in Florida.

- As of Aug. 8, the CDC listed 7,510 total confirmed monkeypox/orthopoxvirus cases in the U.S. and 633 in Florida.

- On Aug. 1, the CDC had reported 5,189 confirmed cases in the U.S. and 373 cases in Florida.

- On July 22, the CDC had reported 2,891 cases in the U.S.

- A presumptive positive case was first announced in Florida on May 22.

Common questions, things to know

Below are some common questions associated with monkeypox and other things to know. The USA TODAY Network - Florida will produce a weekly report on the virus, the counties affected and case counts every Monday using stats from the Florida Department of Health and the CDC.

What are monkeypox symptoms?

It begins with fever, headache, muscle aches, backache, swollen lymph nodes, chills and exhaustion. Within 1 to 3 days after fever, the patient develops a rash, often beginning on the face and then spreading to other parts of the body. Incubation period (time from infection to symptoms) is usually 7-14 days but can range from 5-21 days.

How is monkeypox transmissible?

Possible human-to-human transmission includes:

- Coughing. If an infected person coughs, it can be spread through respiratory droplets via the eye, nose or mouth.
- Animals. The virus can be transmitted by a bite, scratch or body fluids. Rodents are the primary source.

• Broken skin. The virus can enter the body through broken skin, even if the break is not visible.

Is there a monkeypox vaccine?

Yes. The CDC states: "Because monkeypox and smallpox viruses are genetically similar, vaccines developed to protect against smallpox viruses may be used to prevent monkeypox infections. The U.S. government has two stockpiled vaccines — JYNNEOS and ACAM2000 — that can prevent monkeypox in people who are exposed to the virus. Vaccines may be recommended for people who have had or may have contact with someone who has monkeypox, or for healthcare and public health workers who may be exposed to the virus."

Is monkeypox a gay disease?

No. Although the latest majority of monkeypox can be transmitted through close or intimate contact, it's not required, and the virus can spread to anyone of any sexual orientation.

At least two children in the U.S. in close contact with infected family members have been diagnosed with it.

When should I get tested?

The CDC and the Florida Department of Health recommend testing if you see desuspicious skin lesions or if you've had close personal contact with someone who may have a confirmed or probable case.

teachers, who just want to teach.”

Crist, she concluded, can't beat Republican Gov. Ron DeSantis. By contrast, Crist at his appearances said the same about Fried in a race polls show is tightening amid a wave of hard-edged TV spots each Democrat is flinging against the other.

“We need somebody who goes into this job who doesn't need on-the-job training, and I certainly don't,” said Crist, who is focusing mostly on DeSantis but has also pushing back against Fried's attack on his Republican past.

Crist said his spots weren't negative. “I've gone accurate,” he said.

“I was hoping that it could've been more positive,” Crist said of the campaign end game. “She's decided to do what she's done. Everybody has their own style. I'm just going to make sure people know what they're getting on that ballot.”

Whoever wins today's primary, Crist said Democrats will rally around the nominee, knowing who the real opponent is.

“The galvanizing part of this campaign is a guy named Ron DeSantis,” Crist said.

The primary is certain to be marked by low voter turnout, with past August primaries pulling in fewer than one in three Florida Democrats. Crist has been endorsed by Florida's largest labor unions and has a larger force of get-out-the-vote support.

But Fried is banking on many late-deciding voters coming to her side, as Florida Democrats finally begin making up their minds in a contest that began 15 months ago, when the two rivals announced their candidacies to take on DeSantis.

A University of North Florida poll released last week showed Fried with a narrow lead over Crist, on the strength of stronger support among women voters. Crist's campaign countered with its own internal survey showing him comfortably ahead.

Polls, though, show DeSantis beating either Democrat in November's general election.

But in making their final case to Democratic voters, Fried and Crist are a contrast, in gender and generation.

Fried, 44, is eagerly courting the votes of Florida's women, having underscored her frequently mentioned “something new” campaign theme with a TV spot showing her striding through rows of male mannequins, symbolically separating her from past governors, including Crist, who have all been men.

A spot now airing across the state features women who made history — from suffragettes to tennis legend Billie Jean King and U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson. Fried talks of “standing on the shoulders of all these trailblazing women.”

Crist, 66, tends to rely on a calm delivery, unspooling highlights and anecdotes from his long history as a former state senator, education commissioner, attorney general and governor — all when he was a Republican.

He also ran unsuccessfully as a Democrat for governor in 2014, losing to Republican Gov. Rick Scott by 64,145 votes, a 1% margin. Crist has since served three terms as a Democratic congressman from St. Petersburg.

In campaigning, Crist speaks fondly of Florida, its environment and people, promotes his defense of Florida consumers against insurers and utilities, and occasionally notes the gold wrist-advance his agenda, particularly on education issues, where he has been especially active in the primary. It also carries the risk of rejection, though, with DeSantis appearing more vulnerable if voters rebuff his candidates after he spent so much energy campaigning for them.

“This governor is extremely popular with the grass-and-foli Republicans and those primary voters look for his opinion on people to vote for,” said Leon County GOP Chair and Florida GOP chairman of chairs Evan Pover. “I think he's used that power to push for active conservatives who share his view of Florida. It's something Republicans have wanted for a long time, Republicans who are willing to fight for a conservative agenda.”

DeSantis is doing a lot to help his preferred candidates.

The governor wrote $1,000 checks from his political committee. Friends of Ron DeSantis, to county school board candidates he backed this year, and also is paying for mailers in their races.

At least three mailers paid for by Friends of Ron DeSantis have gone out to help his endorsed school board candidates in some counties. They encourage voters to “stand with Governor DeSantis on August 23rd.”

DeSantis also toured the state to support school board candidates, with rallies in Miami, Jacksonville, Sarasota and Ormond Beach.

Florida school board races aren't typical primaries because they technically are nonpartisan. A candidate's party affiliation doesn't even appear on the ballot.

The 30 school board candidates DeSantis is backing are conservatives who, in many cases, are running against more liberal opponents. DeSantis' involvement could boost GOP turnout in the primary, which many voters overlook. Turnout is typically between 20% and 30%.

Unlike Trump's efforts to reshape the GOP, DeSantis' focus on school board contests is more about pushing his conservative education agenda, which has included legislation limiting how race, gender and sexual orientation are discussed in schools.

“I think there are two ways to look at it,” said University political science professor Frank Orlando. “One is to see a strategic angle of investing in candidates that will be beholden to him in case of a possible 2024 run, especially if he runs up against President Trump.”

Orlando added: “The other way to look at it is that he has genuine convictions about the education reforms that he has pushed beyond just electoral posturing. If this is the case, then there's no better way to do that than on the local level.”

A mailer sent to Sarasota County voters says his school board candidates “will support the DeSantis Education Agenda” and “Stop indoctrination.”

“It just shows that he recognizes strong leadership and the need for strong leadership in the most important race in 2022, which is the school board,” said Aly Marie Legge, a conservative Hillsborough County School Board candidate endorsed by DeSantis.

The governor also has been active in traditional Republican primaries. In many cases, his endorsement of a GOP candidate was enough to ward off serious challengers.

State Sen. Wilton Simpson is running for Agriculture Commissioner with to-ken GOP opposition after both DeSantis and Trump backed him.

State Senate candidates Blaise Ingolia in Pasco County and Jonathan Martin in Lee County didn't attract any Republican opposition — and are almost certain to win their races in heavily Republican areas — after DeSantis endorsed them.

In some cases, DeSantis is getting involved in competitive GOP primaries, both by endorsing and offering financial support.

The governor's political committee gave $50,000 to Friends of Kiyon Michael, the political committee supporting Michael, a Jacksonville Republican, in a state House primary against two other Republicans. DeSantis endorsed Michael.

Even in races where DeSantis hasn't endorsed, he is playing a big role in the GOP primaries.

Many GOP candidates have touted their support for DeSantis' agenda, showing how popular he is within the party.

Three include candidates for Congress down to local offices.

Republican county commission candidate Mark Smith mentions DeSantis twice in his latest mailer, saying: “Just like Governor DeSantis, we can count on Mark to protect our freedoms and liberty from government mandates and overreach.”

Smith is running for the Sarasota County Commission against another Republican in a tightly contested race. Candidates have run off of DeSantis for touting his support when he hasn't offered it.

Last month, a lawyer for the DeSantis campaign sent a cease-and-desist letter to a Miami-based political committee backing Marta Perez, who is running as an incumbent for reelection to a seat on the powerful nine-member Miami-Dade County School Board. DeSantis had endorsed another candidate who had worked in his administration.

The political committee featured mailer ads that included a photo of her side-by-side with DeSantis and a smaller photo of DeSantis gesturing with a thumbs up.

When DeSantis does back a candidate, he has offered significant financial support.

The governor's political committee gave $10,000 to the Jobs and Prosperity for Florida political committee, which is chaired by his lieutenant governor Jeanette Núñez. That committee has paid more than $200,000 to a consulting firm working for two Miami-Dade County School Board candidates endorsed by DeSantis, one of whom used to work for Núñez.

It's unusual for someone like DeSantis who has a competitive reelection race to spend a considerable amount of his own campaign money helping other candidates. The governor's extraordinary fundraising is allowing him to be generous with those funds. His political committee has more than $125 million in cash on hand.

“I don't recall a governor of any state going as ‘local’ as Governor DeSantis has” with his endorsements and campaign support, Saint Leo's Orlando said. “Not just in Florida, but nationwide, but... he really has money to burn.”

Legge has benefited from mailers paid for by DeSantis' political committee.

“It's a good help,” she said. “We appreciate it.”

Legge is a 35-year-old mother who has attended most Hillsborough School Board meetings over the past three years, complaining about COVID-19 policies and other issues. She is involved with Moms for America, a conservative activist group based in Missouri.

She first met DeSantis when she spoke at a press conference the governor held to sign legislation on how racial issues are taught in schools.

“It really should just be back-to-basics education, we shouldn't have these divisive topics where we're pitting children against each other,” Legge said.

school officials to draw arbitrary and discriminatory lines in their attempts to implement the law."

The law, which has drawn nationwide attention, prevents instruction on gender identity and sexual orientation in kindergarten through third grade and requires that such instruction be "age-appropriate ... in accordance with state academic standards" in older grades.

Republican lawmakers killed the measure the "Parental Rights in Education" bill. Opponents labeled it the "Don't Say Gay" bill.

Opponents also have challenged the constitutionality of the measure in a federal lawsuit filed in Tallahassee against the State Board of Education, the Florida Department of Education, Education Commissioner Manny Diaz Jr. and several school boards. That case is pending.

The lawsuit against the school boards in Indian River, Orange, Duval and Palm Beach counties was filed July 25 in federal court in Orlando. It has been assigned to U.S. District Judge Wendy Berger, who was named to the federal bench by former President Donald Trump after serving as a state appellate and circuit judge.

Attorneys for the four school boards have not filed initial arguments in the case. But in the separate case filed in Tallahassee, Attorney General Ashley Moody's office has contended that the state has the right to set curriculums for public schools and disputed that the Legislature acted out of animus against LGBTQ individuals.

"The bill reflects no governmental preference about what students should learn about sexual orientation and gender identity," the state's lawyers wrote in a motion to dismiss the case. "Those subjects must be taught appropriately and, for the youngest children, they may be taught by parents, not in public-school classroom settings. That is a legitimate (state) interest."

The plaintiffs in the Orlando lawsuit include Jen and Matt Cousins, the parents of four children in Orange County schools; Will Larkins, a senior at Orange County's Winter Park High School who is president of the school's Queer Student Union; David Dinan and Vik Gongidi, a married same-sex couple who have two children in Indian River County schools; and the nonprofit CenterLink, Inc., which has members including LGBTQ community centers in Orange, Duval and Palm Beach counties.

They are represented by lawyers from the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, Southern Legal Counsel, the Southern Poverty Law Center and the international law firm of Baker McKenzie.

In Friday's motion for a preliminary injunction, they raised a series of arguments, including that the law "impermissibly chills" speech in violation of the First Amendment and is unconstitutionally overbroad and vague.

They also cited steps that the school districts have taken to try to comply with the law.

As an example, they wrote that the Duval, Indian River and Palm Beach school districts have reduced or eliminated LGBTQ-student support groups and anti-bullying guidance.

"In (the Palm Beach County district), professional development workshops on LGBTQ+ issues were suspended and, in many districts, books with LGBTQ+ characters for students in K-12 have been removed or are being reviewed under HB 1557," the motion said. "Teachers have been encouraged to avoid anything that might generate discussion about LGBTQ+ people and have been chilled from supporting LGBTQ+ students and student groups. And, organizations that have traditionally provided LGBTQ+ training and other services to schools are being blocked from completing their work."

building possible," according to an Aug. 22 announcement from the nonprofit.

Indian River Lagoon research

Rainone's estate donated $500,000 toward the $665,000 purchase price, Widder said. ORCA has collected $921,000 of its $1.2 million fundraising goal in a campaign it kicked off in April, Widder said.

The city assisted with renovations and in 2019 donated a defunct water quality testing lab near the airport that has become ORCA's new citizen science center, Widder said. The Vero Beach Art Club also helped by painting murals in the space.

"The city of Vero Beach has been so supportive of our efforts on behalf of the lagoon, we are feeling really great about this move," Widder said. "The community support has been phenomenal and it's an ideal location for ORCA, as its midway between the extremes of the 156-mile-long Indian River Lagoon."

The lagoon runs through five coastal counties, including Martin, St. Lucie, Indian River, Brevard and Volusia.

Why did IRSC evict ORCA?

ORCA had been based at the historic Coast Guard building on Seaway Drive in Fort Pierce since 2005, until IRSC issued a 60-day notice to vacate in May 2021.

The IRSC board in April 2021 "deemed that the facility was not being maintained to IRSC standards and was unfit for continued occupancy," spokesperson Suzanne Seldes told TCPalm at the time.

The 1936 building was deteriorating, IRSC officials told ORCA. That baffled ORCA staff. Managing Director Warren Falls, who is a licensed contractor, said the structure was "strong" and "sound," and had passed all its fire inspections. The interior and mostly exterior had been renovated in 2018 to fix hurricane damage.

IRSC repeatedly denied TCPalm's request for inspection records detailing problems with the building.

IRSC also denied ORCA's request for more time to find its next headquarters.

"The way with which they seem to need to get us out of there was quite mystifying," Widder told

Edie Widder, lead scientist and founder of the Ocean Research & Conservation Association, speaks with board members and donors on March 29 during an open house event at the organization's laboratory in Vero Beach. PATRICK DOVE/TCPALM

TCPalm Thursday. "At the time, I begged them to let us stay a little longer."

IRSC Hospitality Center

Once ORCA vacated, a new name appeared on the sign: "Hospitality Center." What the building will be used for remains unclear. It's too early to determine, as there is "much to do to make the building fit for occupancy," Seldes told TCPalm Thursday.

The building will remain unoccupied until an assessment, review and renovation are complete, Seldes said. She could not provide a timeline.

The building is reserved for the college's hospitality program, which focuses on the tourism industry, Seldes told TCPalm last year.

The building features Dade County pine, New England-style arches with tucked-away windows, lengthy kitchen cabinets designed for naval military officers who lived there during World War II. A third-floor ladder accesses a panoramic view of the ocean, inlet and lagoon.

Despite not having a headquarters this past year, ORCA expanded its citizen science program and continued its Indian River Lagoon research, Widder said.

"I'm looking forward to even more advancements in the coming years, when we've got this new space to depend on," she said.

ORCA is still accepting donations at

nearly empty, to the dismay of some. "We think it went very well," said Eric Behymer, owner of Indian River Auction Gallery, which handled the auction. "A lot of it did go back to the family, the Tripsons and the Sextons, which we were happy to see. There was quite a bit that's going to be taken to other local restaurants and displayed there."

The Sexton family, descendants of well-known local architect and developer Waldo Sexton, previously owned the building. Sexton built the Patio and other icons of Old Vero: the Driftwood Inn, McKee Botanical Garden and Szechuan Palace.

For his descendants, the Patio's closure was far more bitter than sweet. For one thing, they had no idea an auction would happen at all, said Mike Sexton, Waldo Sexton's great-grandson and a local real estate agent.

The family believed the building's interior would remain untouched, but they found out otherwise when the auctioneer broke the news to them, he said.

"It was kind of a surprise," Sexton said. "But when you sell something, it's not yours anymore."

He and his father decided to buy back some of the décor, he said, including some of the wrought-iron architecture. The family didn't take anything before they sold the restaurant because they thought the interior would be preserved, he said.

"Had I known that, I probably would have just taken some things that I wanted," he said. "But I was trying to do the right thing and leave it there for everybody to enjoy."

Real estate broker Prakas & Co. purchased the building Feb. 21 for $600,000, according to county property records. Athan Prakas, Prakas & Co.'s owner, is leasing it to transform it into a "golf-simulator sports bar," he said.

Its interior will be redone to accommodate three virtual-golf simulators, while its exterior will remain the same, he said.

The auction cleared the way for the restaurant's transformation. More than 300 items were up for sale, ranging from the building's wrought iron fencing to its chandeliers, oil paintings and old dinner menus.

A majority of it was sold, Behymer said, and some items, such as the French floor tile, sold for as much as $3,500.

"We're thankful to everybody for coming out to support the history... and wanting to preserve some of that stuff," he said. "We are very thankful and happy to see it go to individuals rather than it being trashed."

About 50 items were still left after the auction ended Wednesday, so the Indian River Auction Gallery likely will hold a second auction later this month, he said.

Even though it wasn't the ending the Sexton family wanted, Mike Sexton acknowledged there was a silver lining: The building itself is still standing, and parts of it will live on.

"As bittersweet as it is, I'm kind of hoping maybe some of the people in the community that love that place are going to get to take a little piece of it home with them," he said.

And his wish seems to have come true. Ocean Grill and Kelley's Irish Pub will display some items, Behymer said, while other people will get to cherish some décor in the comfort of their homes.

One couple, for example, purchased one of the Patio's signs for $1,100.

"Her and her husband used to eat lunch there daily," he said. "They bought that and the menu, and they're going to hang it in their game room."

these groups come out of the woodwork and all a sudden they start calling you a bigot... and frankly all we are doing is bringing common sense to the equation," Ziegler said.

Christian Family Coalition Florida Executive Director Anthony Verdugo said DeSantis has taken positions on transgender issues that have broad appeal, citing his push to keep transgender individuals from playing women's sports.

"It's not misogyny. It's not sexism. It's common sense," Verdugo said.

In the process, the governor has become the darling of social conservatives.

"He's viewed as a hero," Verdugo said. "He's viewed as a leader. He's viewed as a courageous man, as a statesman. He is willing to say what others are thinking but either will not say or don't have the platform. He has gotten so much support from cultural conservatives because he's speaking their language. He's fighting back."

DeSantis' spokesman Bryan Griffin said the governor is "devoted to protecting children and empowering parents."

"To the extent that sexual topics are being injected into the education of - or marketed towards - children, the governor is standing up and pushing back," he said.

Verdugo believes DeSantis' agenda is a recipe for electoral success, saying it will appeal to suburban female voters who fled the GOP because they didn't like former President Donald Trump.

LGBTQ advocates say it's a cynical strategy.

"They are creating this phony moral panic about LGBTQ people to whip people up into a frenzy and divide people further," said Democratic state Rep. Carlos Guillermo Smith, the state's first openly gay lawmaker.

Whether DeSantis wins reelection could depend in part on whether his cultural approach has crossover appeal and helps him up his base more than it fires up LGBTQ advocates and their allies, who are highly motivated to take him out.

LGBTQ activists mobilize

DeSantis seems to believe that many people are uncomfortable with the discussion around gender identity that has taken place in recent years, and he can use that to his political advantage.

"They talk about pansexuality and all this stuff," DeSantis said during a recent rally for conservative school board candidates. "I'm just thinking... imagine what our elderly, they don't know what any of this stuff is. It's weird that you would even be talking about it."

But Smith, the head of Equality Florida, said acceptance of transgender people is growing and will only increase.

"This conversation reminds me of the conversation around marriage equality," Smith said. "We lost 38 states in a row before the tide changed."

Young people are especially sympathetic to the idea that gender identity is fluid, and have been among the most vocal in pushing back against DeSantis.

There were student led walkouts across the state in response to HB 1557. Now LGBTQ activists are trying to harness this energy into defeating DeSantis.

"DeSantis may think he's winning but let me tell you he's not," said Lakey Love, a transgender individual who co-founded the Florida Coalition for Transgender Liberation. "This generation that's coming out of these public schools are going to push people like him and his out."

Zander Moricz, the Harvard student, said he plans to visit Florida regularly this year and coordinate other campaign efforts from his dorm room.

"DeSantis has brought a lot of energy... out of youth in the state," he said. "Not out of inspiration, but out of fear and urgency."
